Monomeric acrylic esters are produced commercially by several processes based on ethylene cyanohydrin, acetylene,  $\beta$ -propiolactone (see IARC, 1974a) and ethylene oxide (see IARC, 1985a, 1987g). The acetone-cyanohydrin process is the major method for the production of monomeric methacrylate esters (Allyn, 1971).

Dimethylformamide (DMF) is a colorless, water-soluble liquid with a faint ammonia-like odor. This organic solvent is used in acrylic fiber spinning, chemical manufacturing, and pharmaceutical production; it is also present in textile dyes and pigments, paint stripping solvents, and coating, printing, and adhesive formulations [NIOSH/OSHA 1981].

A monomer is a molecule of any class of organic compounds that can bind chemically to the same molecules or other compounds to form a large molecule or polymer containing large number of repeating units of monomers. Polysaccharides, polypeptides, and polynucleotides are some of the biopolymers in living cells.

Also known as a "bonderizer" bonding agents (spelled dentin bonding agents in American English) are resin materials used to make a dental composite filling material adhere to both dentin and enamel. Bonding agents are often methacrylates with some volatile carrier and solvent like acetone. They may also contain diluent monomers.

Many epoxy products also contain additives such as organic solvents, fillers such as fiberglass or sand, and pigments. See the box on page 2. When epoxy resin systems are used, single molecules (monomers) of the epoxy resin chemical and the curing agent combine to form long chains of molecules (polymers).
